New building is approved

UTTLESFORD planners have approved plans for a multi-million-pound chemistry laboratory at Schering's research centre at Great Chesterton.

The agrochemical company is to start work soon, and hopes to have the new buildings ready by August 1988.

The expansion will mean around 50 new jobs.

Schering's director of park centre, Dr David Evans, said: "We employ about 450 here at present, and that will rise to around 500."

The new development, for which tenders are being examined, will be at the south-east part of the site.

New roads

There will be a new chemistry building, an electricity sub-station, an oil storage compound and new roads.

The plan has been approved with conditions to do with landscaping and the preservation of trees.

The new building will have an area of just under 25,000 sq ft.

Company wins airport contract

STANSTED Airport has given a £1.4 million contract for services at the new passenger terminal to contractors Sand Biggs Wall, of Arlesey, Bedfordshire.

The work includes the construction of a large buried water tank, a pumping station, generator building, and two kilometres of water main.

Other works include water and electricity services and a 2.4km access road.

The contract is to be completed in just under a year.

Computer system for phone production

PHILIPS is to spend over £300,000 on a new computer-based system for the radiophone production line at its Cambridge factory.

The group has signed a contract with the UK manufacturing systems company ISTEI Automation for installation over the next 10 months.

The system will control production from the receipt of a finished pocket phone.

Cambridge is now the world headquarters of Philips Radio Communication Systems, and the St Andrews Road plant is its leading factory.

John Hemming, of Philips, and Jim Thompson, of ISTEI, sign the contract.
